MONARCH HAD BAD WEATHER

Vessel She Had in Tow for Frontiere, Mexico, is Much Damaged.

The tug Monarch, which has just returned from Frontiere, Mexico, whither she towed a river steamer, had an exceptionally rough voyage, especially on the return trip, and although she escaped without damage she was delayed in reaching port.

The tug sailed from New Orleans with the Clara Raymos, a fine passenger steamer, in tow, and when she got well into the gulf encountered bad weather, the seas running high. The Raymos had not been built for open waters, as she is to ply on the Mexican rivers, and she received much damage, including carrying away of the pilot house, smoke stack and promenade deck.

The voyage to Frontiere was nothing compared in roughness with the return trip, according to Captain Rocheblave, and had the Raymos been in tow she would have been lost. The wind blew a gale from the northwest for about forty-eight hours, and the seas were running so high that they frequently broke over the tug. In addition to this the coal supply of the steamer ran short, and before getting to Pensacola she had to put into South Pass both for coal and to get out of the weather.

DROWNED IN A WASH TUB

Eighteen-Month-Old Baby Meets Death While at Play in Yard.

Columbus, Ga., June 5.—Henry Elliot Long, the 18 months' old son of Mrs. Mary Long of this city, is dead, the result of a most peculiar accident.

The child fell into a washtub of soapy water while playing in the back yard of the residence. Shortly afterward his little sister discovered the accident and pulled him out. The child's head was completely immersed when she first noticed him.

A physician worked on the little boy an hour and restored respiration, but the patient died after lingering thirty-three hours. The extreme soapiness of the water, a good deal of which he swallowed, is attributed by the physician as the main reason why the efforts to save him failed even after respiration had been restored.

FOR HEAD OF THIS PEOPLE

Harrisburg, Pa., June 5.—United States Senator Knox will formally be endorsed for President and pledged the support of the Pennsylvania delegation to the next republican state convention which will be held in this city on Thursday, for the nomination of a candidate for state treasurer. Senator Knox's interests are in charge of Congressman James Francis Burke, who came here from Pittsburgh to-day and opened headquarters. Senator Penrose, who is in hearty accord with the movement for the endorsement of his colleague by the state convention arrived from Philadelphia this afternoon and will remain until after the convention.

Inferior Cuts of Meat.

The so called inferior cuts of meat are taken from those portions of the animal which are most constantly in motion during the life, hence they are tough and stout of fiber. So far as nutrition goes, however, they are to be preferred to the very tender portions (such as beef tenderloin), which contain a smaller percentage of body making material. It is necessary to give them an entirely different treatment to make them palatable when served. Long cooking at a somewhat low heat is needed to give tenderness and impart flavor.—London Mail.

A "JIM CROW" TEST CASE ON

NASHVILLE NEGRESS IS COMPLAINANT

Alleges Violation of the Interstate Laws By a Southern Road.

ARGUMENT WILL BE HEARD BY THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION THIS WEEK ON CAUSE AS A TEST CASE—A DECISION EXPECTED SOON.

Washington, June 3.—Harriman is not the only trouble maker the interstate commerce commission has. Georgia Edwards, of Nashville, Tenn., a negress, is just now causing the commissioners even more bother than the railroad wizard. She it was who brought the "Jim Crow" test case, on which arguments are to be heard by the commissioners this week.

A Delicate Point. On their decision may depend the future maintenance of the system of separate railroad accommodations for white and negro passengers in the southern states. Georgia Edwards has been in the habit of visiting relatives at Dalton, Ga., once a year. The last time she went over she went on the Western and Atlantic, operated by the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway company. She bought a first-class ticket and entered a car for white persons, and when ordered to the "Jim Crow" car Georgia astonished the conductor by proudly asserting she was an "interstate passenger."

Jim Crow By Force. She was then put into the "Jim Crow" car by force. In her complaint to the interstate commerce commission she charges that though she bought a first-class ticket she was not given first-class accommodations, the car into which she was required to go being dirty and filled with smoke where men were drinking and cursing.

On this account she contends that negroes are treated with inequality in violation of the interstate commerce act and that they are thus subjected to unjust discrimination and undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage as compared with the treatment accorded white passengers.

The Railroad Answer. The railroads in their answer to the complaint and in the testimony taken in Chattanooga by a special commissioner set forth that Georgia suffered no injustice, at least not on account of her color.

It was admitted that for the purpose of government of the passenger service for the avoidance of trouble and confusion, white and negro patrons were separated. Denial was made, however, that there was any difference between the cars for white and colored women, except that the rarity of travel of colored women justified the partitioning off of a section of their car for men. Upon these facts, the commission will be called upon to hand down an opinion.

All of the city's garbage wagons will be put to work going through the several streets of the city, and garbage that is placed in boxes or cans on the sidewalk will be promptly removed by the department.

office I have had in view:

1st. The enforcement of the laws without fear or favor.

2nd. The denying of special favors that a few men might be benefited thereby.

3rd. The administration of the laws impartially and free of bias, prejudice or favoritism.

4th. The making of disolute characters fear the law, that in so doing they would recognize the fact that they had to conduct themselves with decency, and respect decent people.

5th. The upbuilding of the community, and the broadening out of opportunities for all men who wish to live decent, respectable lives in a respectable community and who would refuse to tolerate disorder and unlawfulness.

In this work I have had to contend against:

1st. The man who did not wish the laws enforced because enforcement affected him in a personal way.

2nd. The opposition of those who desired a non-enforcement for dollars and cents reasons personal to themselves and to their greedy pocket books.

I have refused to accede to the demands of those who wanted a "wide-open town"—a town where mean men and meaner men could do as they pleased, as long as they had money to spend.

The street walker wishes to flaunt her brazenness in the eyes of our people. She wants to fill her goggle with rotgut, whiskey and parade her depravity before the eyes of our women and children.

I say she shall not do it if I can prevent it. This depraved creature shall respect our women as long as it is in my power to make her do it.

She can not fill up on whiskey and parade the streets as long as I am mayor, and she knows it. And our law-abiding people know it, and last, although the most important of all—our women and our children—know it.

The man who wishes to conduct a business as he pleases to run it, regardless of law, and the man who does not want the law enforced in his particular case, have never supported me, and never will do it. These men do not wish the laws enforced. They are after the dollar which means in this case "every man for himself and the devil for the hindmost."

I stand for the home, decency and the protection of our women and children.
